In Computer Science class, we teach the kids problem solving and critical thinking skills. We also emphasize the importance of teamwork, delegation and collaboration. In this unplugged activity, students worked together to stack their cups in pyramid without using their hands. They were only allowed to use strings and a rubber band. After the activity, the class reflected on what worked, what did not and what they think they should do next time they are given the same type of activity. The reflection part is as important as the activity itself as it helps increase student learning.

Exhibiting attributes of the IB Learner Profile (IBLP) and teaching the SDGs to our BBS students is connected to the IB mission statement of creating a “better and more peaceful world” and developing “internationally minded people”. The IB Office and IB Team have always focused on the importance of the IBLP and the role it plays in empowering students to take self-initiated action as a result of the learning.
